Webinar Theme:-

Conservation of plant diversity is among society's most daunting challenges, and one that can only be met through interdisciplinary efforts. Strong Science will underpin sustainable policies, yet scientific uncertainty abounds in our understanding of complex ecological dynamics operating across multiple spatial and temporal scales from sub cellular to landscape, seasonal to epochal. Such uncertainty reaches beyond boundaries of traditional disciplinary thinking, necessitating shared insight from ecologists, evolutionary biologists, taxonomist and palaeobotanist. How will species and community is respond to a changing climate? What effect will biodiversity loss have on functioning of ecosystem and delivery ecosystem services? Which species is most vulnerable to extinction and how can damaged ecosystem be restored? Tackling these and other questions will undoubtedly required a thriving and interdisciplinary communities of biodiversity scientists and any assessment of current status of biodiversity is incomplete without and understanding of the loss and gain of species over geological time scale. The field of Palaeobotany and Palaeoecology looks deep into the past to provide this perspective and to inform our outlook of current biodiversity dynamics under global change.
